ABSTRACT

This document continues a 64-year tradition by listing books for adolescents, arranged by subjects that teenagers have asked about in library visits. The browsing list contains approximately 1,250 books, about 350 of which are new listings, marked for the reader's convenience. Approximately 100 sections contain the entries, grouped into the following broader sections: (1) The Creative Spirit; (2) Science; (3) Here/Now; (4) One World; and (5) Action and Adventure. For each of these sections, a few titles have been annotated in some depth, but most entries provide only a brief note. New in 1993 are sections on "being gay" and the holocaust. New titles on Vietnam and the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) are of particular interest. All of the books have been read and selected by librarians in young adult services. (SLD)

Books For The TEEN AGE

TO YOU THE READER

CONGRATULATIONS! You have become part of a 64-year old tradition by picking up this copy of the 1993 Books for the Teen Age. This list has been especially prepared for teenagers in New York City since 1929. It is a browsing list and the books are arranged by subjects you have asked for when visiting the library. There are approximately 1250 books on the list. Each year about 350 books are removed from the list and the same amount added. The new titles are marked with an asterisk (*).

In response to your requests we have added two new sections this year, "Being Gay" and "The Holocaust." Excellent new titles on AIDS and Vietnam continue to be published and are reflected in those sections. Of course, there are stories to scare you, make you laugh or cry, or show you new ways to work through a problem; extraordinary people to meet who are doing unusual and exciting things; and books of information on subjects too numerous to mention. Lots to inform you and many also for your enjoyment!

Many of the titles listed are available in recorded format or Braille from the Andrew Heiskell Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. For information on this service and a special large print edition of Books for the Teen Age, call 212-206-5400.

All of the books have been read and selected by Young Adult Librarians who work with teenagers in the branch libraries. Because you vary so much in your interests, maturity and reading ability, the books on the list vary greatly in difficulty and depth. They may be shelved in various places in the library. Ask your librarian to help you find a book you are particularly interested in reading. Let your librarian know whether you like the book or not. We are interested in your opinion. It will help us in selecting books for Young Adult collections and in preparing the Books for the Teen Age list next year.

The books on the list are always on display in the Office of Young Adult Services and at the Nathan Straus Young Adult Library, Donnell Library Center, 20 West 53rd Street. This library also has a large collection of books and magazines especially for teens. Exhibits and activities in which you can participate are frequently scheduled at this center.

Each New York Public Library branch has many of the books on this list and other books of special interest to teenagers. They also have programs for teenagers from time to time. If you want advice about books and reading, or if you want the schedules of programs in all branches, call the Office of Young Adult Services, (212) 340-0908.

May this 1993 BOOKS FOR THE TEEN AGE bring you many hours of good reading.

THE CREATIVE SPIRIT

Lily, by Cindy Bonner
Algonquin, 1992

"I almost didn't feel the tap on my shoulder. It was more a sense of having somebody standing too close to me that I felt. That sense, more than the actual tap, was what caused me to turn around.

It was Marion Beatty standing behind me....
I knew I should have turned back to watch Daniel race, but my eyes wouldn't do what I willed them to. They stayed on Marion's face. Something in me wouldn't believe that anybody as bad as he was supposed to be could have a smile that nice."

The Mamur Zapt and the Donkey-Vous, by Michael Pearce
Mysterious Press, 1992

"Owen and Mahmoud was sitting wearily at a table on the terrace. It was after eleven and the hotel manager had just sent them out some coffee.... Because of the relative darkness, the stars in the yet unpolluted Egyptian sky seemed very close, almost brushed by the fringed tops of the palms. The air was heavy with heady perfume of jasmine from the trays which the flower sellers held up to the railings for inspection....
The donkey-boys had stopped all pretense of expecting business and were absorbed in the game they played with sticks and a board....
'Yes,' said Mahmoud, 'they know something. But how much do they know?'
'They know how he disappeared.' "

Squashed, by Joan Bauer
Delacorte, 1992

"I grew giant pumpkins because I liked battle, and growing one was an everyday fight. You had to be in it for the long haul. Rain, frost, bugs, and fungus could strike at any time and stop you dead. Only certain growers are cut out to handle this pressure–tough people of steel who can stand against the odds. Richard says giant-pumpkin growers are the spawning salmon of agriculture, since only the strongest make it upstream each year for anything worth mentioning.
Not all vegetables are this draining. Lettuce doesn't bring heartache. Turnips don't

SCIENCE

Into the Mummy's Tomb, by Nicholas Reeves
Scholastic/Madison, 1992

"There, inside the shell, lay the body of the king. Carter could see that it was neatly wrapped in linen bandages. These were held in place by decorated gold bands. The mummy was covered with the same oils that they had found on the outside of the coffin.

Tutankhamun's mummy bore a magnificent mask of burnished gold, which covered its face and shoulders. Its headcloth was inlaid with blue glass. The vulture and cobra on its forehead, ready to spit fire at the pharaoh's enemies, were of solid gold. The face on Tutankhamun's mask looked sad and gentle. It was, Carter thought, the face of one who had not expected death to come so soon."

Rescue!, by Victor Kelleher
Dial, 1992

"David returned to the enclosure shortly after dawn....On this, as on most mornings, Papio was the first to rise and greet him, his small pointed ears flattened against his skull, always a sure sign that he was pleased. Despite his dull coat, the result of the long period of captivity, he was a magnificent animal: a fully grown male baboon of extraordinary size, weighing over a hundred and forty pounds. Yet even more noticeable than his size was the top of his head where four shiny electrodes winked in the sunlight. These were made of some bright silvery metal that had been embedded in his skull for experimental purposes several months earlier. Now, with the hair growing thickly around them, they were like small unnatural horns or growths. David hated the sight of them, mainly because of what they represented. Papio had once been responsive and intelligent, but since the electrodes had been implanted he had become slow and unsure of himself, apparently dull-witted."

Our Endangered Earth, by John Langone
Little, Brown, 1992

"If we could get cash for every bit of our trash, we would all be rich. The amount of trash that Americans, the most wasteful people on earth, throw away every single year is mind-boggling. The list includes: 16 billion disposable diapers, 2 billion razors and blades, 2 billion batteries, 1.6 billion pens, 220 million tires, 24 million tons of leaves and grass clippings, enough aluminum to rebuild the entire U. S. commercial airfleet every three months, 12 million tons of glass, 3 million tons of steel, 50 million tons of paper, 10 million tons of plastic, and enough beverage cans to reach the moon 17 times if they were stacked on top of one another."

When Heroes Die, by Penny Raife Durant
Atheneum, 1992

"The word AIDS screamed at him from the kitchen. He went back and picked up the book.

He could glance through it. Even if the lab made a mistake. He could learn a little about it. It was a thin book, written for young people, and full of facts and full-color pictures. It didn't take long to read.

When he closed the back cover, he was filled with a sadness that threatened to overwhelm him. There was no cure. No one had ever gotten over AIDS. If the lab hadn't made a mistake, then Gary's nightmare thoughts about the racetrack were wrong. He wasn't the one on the racetrack. Rob was about to be run over. The driver might be faceless, but the killer had a name. AIDS. And there wasn't any way he could rescue his uncle."

The Diary of Latoya Hunter, by Latoya Hunter
Crown, 1992

"Winter is the most depressing time of the year. If you go outside at 5:00, darkness is what greets you. It's sickening! I love the summer. Summer to me means no heavy coats, daytime until at least 8 at night and no trembling teeth. I can't wait for June to come around, I was born in June you know. I'll be a teenager next birthday. I like the sound of that. Not that it would mean any more privileges for me, twelve is really no different from thirteen. I would like thirteen to mean I'm a bona fide teenager, not a little kid! I don't want to have to feel bad if I get a crush on a guy for example. It would be so great if I could talk to my mom and say, 'I really like this guy at school.' She would get upset. I don't want to be an adult or anything I just want to be able to talk to my mom about new found feelings and things like that."

Honor Bound, by Joseph Steffan
Villard, 1992

"Back home, my conservative environment and involvement in the church shielded me from sex and alcohol. But now there was nothing to shield me, and the pressure to conform was on. Peer pressure can be a powerful thing, but it is probably stronger at a military academy, where it is amplified by training designed to produce complete uniformity....

The peer pressure I was feeling was enhanced by growing confusion about my sexuality. Or, I should say, my growing lack of confusion....

I knew I couldn't be a homosexual, I just couldn't....

I was in a military academy, and homosexuals aren't allowed in the military. It was that thought that scared me the most–the thought of losing everything I was investing in

ONE WORLD

Song of the Buffalo Boy, by Sherry Garland
Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1992

" Why do you call me beautiful, when all the other villagers call me ugly and con hoang—fatherless child? See, my hair is not as thick and straight and black as yours, and my eyes do not have the beautiful slant of yours. And my skin—how I detest these freckles on my nose! I want to look like you and your family. I hate being different.' Loi plopped down on the edge of the well and stared at her hands in her lap. Even they were ugly—long and large, not tiny and delicately tapered like her mother's....

Loi closed her eyes and thought of the photograph of the tall soldier with blue eyes standing next to her mother. No one knew, but Loi kept it hidden under the family altar, wrapped in a piece of the old blue ao dai that had belonged to her mother. In the photo, Má was holding a baby and her face was beaming with love. Whether it was love for the soldier, or for the baby, or for both, Loi guessed she would never know."

AK, by Peter Dickinson
Delacorte, 1990

"The shrill voices battled pointlessly to and fro. Paul slipped away and found a patch of shade by a butcher thorn, where he carefully dismantled his AK, oiling each part, the magazine, the receiver cover, the bolt and bolt carrier, the return spring, the barrel and body, with all the oil he had left. He plugged both ends of the barrel with a wad of oily rag, then wrapped each part in a piece of plastic maize bag, tying them around with trip cord. He made a separate parcel of his eighteen rounds and fitted the whole lot into another bag, which he lashed tight. He took one of the mattocks which the commando carried for mine laying and walked away from the camp, but once out of sight he circled to the left, so that no one who had noticed him leave would be able to guess where he had finished up."

Taste of Salt: a Story of Modern Haiti, by Frances Temple
Orchard, 1992

"Some other boys at Titid's, Fortuné and Marcel, become our friends. Show us more of the city of Port-au-Prince, even the part up the hill they call Petionville. Tell us carshine is better than shoeshine....

'But it is dangerous work,' says Marcel. 'You have to be quick.'...

First day at this work, Lally gets his shorts caught on the wiper of some Mercedes-Benz. The man inside have on dark glasses. When the light turns green, he pays no mind to Lally. Could be a fly, you know. Some inconvenience he want to be rid of."

ACTION AND ADVENTURE

The Right Kind of Heroes, by Kevin Horrigan
Algonquin, 1992

" 'Eastside' is what St. Louisans call East St. Louis High School. It lies toward the eastern edge of East St. Louis, forty nine blocks east of the Mississippi river along State Street, out toward where the floodplain rises to meet wooded bluffs, along the route white folks migrated just as soon as they could scrape up enough money to leave town....

The grass on the field is trampled weeds, grown up high around the edges. The team found a body with bullet holes in it in the high grass once, but this is a city that specializes in bodies with bullet holes. The police were called, and practice went on as scheduled."

At the Controls: Women in Aviation, by Carole S. Briggs
Lerner, 1991

"In 1936 Beryl Markham felt ready to make the most challenging flight of her life—across the Atlantic Ocean from east to west. Since she would be heading into the wind, the crossing would be difficult. Markham arrived at Abingdon Airport in England on September 1 amidst 30 mile-per-hour (48 km/h) westerly winds and dense fog. After four days of waiting for clear weather, she would stay on the ground no longer. 'Neck or nothing,' she was quoted as saying. This was Markham's way of saying that she was willing to risk even her life for the record."

To the Summit, by Claire Rudolf Murphy
Lodestar, 1992

"Strapped in the copilot's seat of a Cessna 185, seventeen-year-old Sarah Janson stared down at miles and miles of green spruce trees broken only by twisting streams and countless small lakes....

Today, June 1, Sarah, her dad, and seven other climbers would begin their expedition up Mount McKinley, the tallest mountain in North America. Sarah's heart pumped with excitement, strong and ready to go. She had begged her dad for months to let her come along. Finally, here they were. She wondered if her dad, sitting right behind her, was as nervous as she."

CORRECTION

DUE TO PRINTING ERRORS, LINES WERE OMITTED FROM PAGES 4 AND 28. FOLLOWING ARE THE CORRECTED BOOK EXCERPTS. WE APOLOGIZE FOR THE INCONVENIENCE.

Correction for page 4:

Delacorte, 1992

"I grew giant pumpkins because I liked battle, and growing one was an everyday fight. You had to be in it for the long haul. Rain, frost, bugs, and fungus could strike at any time and stop you dead. Only certain growers are cut out to handle this pressure–tough people of steel who can stand against the odds. Richard says giant pumpkin growers are the spawning salmon of agriculture, since only the strongest make it upstream each year for anything worth mentioning.

Not all vegetables are this draining. Lettuce doesn't bring heartache. Turnips don't ask for your soul. Potatoes don't care where you are or even where they are. Tomatoes cuddle up to anyone who'll give them mulch and sunshine. But giants like Max need you every second. You can forget about a whiz-bang social life."

Correction for page 28:

Villard, 1992

"Back home, my conservative environment and involvement in the church shielded me from sex and alcohol. But now there was nothing to shield me, and the pressure to conform was on. Peer pressure can be a powerful thing, but it is probably stronger at a military academy, where it is amplified by training designed to produce complete uniformity....

The peer pressure I was feeling was enhanced by growing confusion about my sexuality. Or, I should say, my growing lack of confusion....

I knew I couldn't be a homosexual, I just couldn't....

I was in a military academy, and homosexuals aren't allowed in the military. It was that thought that scared me the most–the thought of losing everything I was investing in Annapolis and my future as an officer."
